design

The Design Studio holds a central position in Architectural Education. Design is not textbook-based learning and the role of the teacher and their contribution to the learning process is very significant, considering that there is no formal 'education' to be a Design Teacher.

With more than 500 colleges and institutions teaching architecture in India, it is imperative that measures are taken to anchor quality education. The objective of this event is to create a platform for sharing of experiences and to help understand strategies and methods of design education with a larger group of teachers. It will encourage dialogues and discussions, creating a space for peer sharing and learning.

TEACHING DESIGN STUDIOS

Workshop conducted by:
Meghal Arya, Ph.D
Associate Professor, CEPT Ahmedabad
Executive Director, Centre for Professional Development

Teaching a design studio is a multi-faceted craft. At the larger level, it asks the questions of 'what is to be taught'. It builds into itself the questions of the skills of the teacher, their innate ability to hold conversations and dialogue, to be the bridge between the external world and the student; eventually to inspire the student to give more than their potential.

With more than 500 colleges and institutions teaching architecture in India, it is imperative that measures are taken to anchor quality education. The objective of this workshop is to create a platform for sharing of experiences and to help understand strategies and methods of design education. It will encourage dialogues and discussions, creating a space for peer learning and shed light on the challenges and knowledge paradigm of a design studios.
